

THE GREAT MIGRATION

What was the Great Migration?

In the early 1900's, many African-Americans wanted to leave the south in order to find a better life. There were not many opportunities in the south, and the African-Americans that did have jobs as sharecroppers were losing crops.

The Jim Crow laws were another reason that African-Americans left the south. The Jim Crow laws gave blacks separate but equal status, and racial discrimination was still strong in the south. People became part of the Great Migration hoping that they would leave discrimination behind.

COLORED

PREVIEW

Please Sign In or Sign Up to download the printable version of this worksheet

Detroit, and New York City saw a rise in their African-American populations. The Harlem Renaissance was a result of the Great Migration. Life was better in the north for many African-Americans, but racial discrimination still happened outside of the south.

NEWPATH
LEARNING