

THE ROARING TWENTIES

The 1920's were a time of social, economical, and political change in the United States. After World War I, the economy changed drastically, and America began to take advantage of these changes. Men and women began to raise their standards of living, spending money on new technologies that they put on credit. Cars began to become a huge influence on society, and soon millions of people owned Ford's invention.

Politically, there were many changes in the 1920's. The United States began to step back from world affairs, and became isolated from world events and organizations, as the focus on building local society became more prevalent.

The many immigrants still arriving in America had a more difficult time acclimating to the United States during this time period, and were not always treated well. While many Americans were finding it easy to get work, these groups were unemployed and destitute. Despite this, they played a large role in the cultural and artistic growth during this time.
